

Next to the donkey and camel, boats are the oldest form of transportation. By the 14th century, the possibility of trade with unknown lands led to the development of large and efficient sailing ships. By the 19th century, the arrival of immense steamships freed sailors from a dependence on unreliable wind power. Today the world's sea-lanes are mainly used to transport merchandise at low cost.

Harbour

floating crane
dock
container ship
container-loading bridge container terminal

Examples of boats and ships

Ocean liner

